We report the first case of multiple pulmonary arteries arising from the brachiocephalic trunk (BCT) in Korea. A male patient was admitted to our hospital with a diagnosis of angina pectoris. A chest radiogram showed multiple pulmonary arteries arising from the BCT. To our knowledge, this is the first case in Korea of multiple pulmonary arteries arising from the BCT. The clinician should be aware of the possibility of this rare condition.Effect of leucocytic proteases and particulate fraction of lung disease and modified lung environment on proteolysis by rat neutrophil azurophilic granules. We have developed an in vitro assay to examine the role of leucocytic proteases and of the particulate fraction of the lung in the maintenance of the proteolytic machinery of azurophilic granules (AG). This assay is based on measurement of the amount of free alpha-1-proteinase inhibitor (a specific marker for AG), which was rapidly recovered after maturation of AG by leucocyte proteases. Cell-free supernatants of neutrophils which were stored in serum-free medium (FBS-free) and in conditioned medium (CM) for 24 hours, also released more free alpha-1-proteinase inhibitor than stimulated neutrophils incubated in control serum-containing medium (FBS). The FBS-free and CM-induced release of free alpha-1-proteinase inhibitor was inhibited by a protease inhibitor cocktail and by PMA activation. It seems, therefore, that FBS-free and CM-induced alpha-1-proteinase inhibitor release was mainly due to the release of AG (which was f678ea9f9e
